Establishing Resource Baseline Estimates for DoD Functional Activities

Executive Summary

OVERVIEW

The Defense Department's managers need reliable financial resource information that reflects the costs of the functional activities they manage. In recent years, several factors—both internal and external to DoD—have reinforced this need for resource information to support functional managers. These factors include the Corporate Information Management initiative, which expands the responsibilities of OSD Principal Staff Assistants (PSAs), and the Government Performance and Results Act of 1993, which links DoD budget requests to the achievement of established cost and performance targets.

To support these requirements, an analysis has been conducted that uses the DoD Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) data to develop financial resource baselines for DoD's functional activities. The FYDP is considered the best single source for resource information because it is DoD's official resource data base. The resources displayed in the FYDP are mutually exclusive and collectively exhaustive. Its standardized structure ensures that resource information can be obtained on a recurring basis with a consistent set of definitions and terms.

We analyzed the financial resource records in the FYDP data base and mapped them to DoD's functional activities and the associated responsible managers. From this analysis, a set of mapping rules was developed that will enable the FYDP to be used on a recurring basis to provide up-to-date, validatable resource information to support PSAs in carrying out their functional management responsibilities.

The Department of Defense can capitalize on the mapping of financial resources to functional activities by taking several actions that would

- ◆ enable functional managers to use the FYDP to support their strategic planning and reengineering,
- ◆ provide managers with enhanced tools or new resource linkages within existing tools, and
- ◆ identify enhancements to the FYDP that would improve its utility to functional managers.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Conduct Pilot Projects

To provide near-term support to enhance decision-making processes for functional managers, initial pilot projects could be conducted in two areas:

- ◆ Resource baseline. The FYDP appears to provide a fairly complete mapping of resources for some functional activities. Working sessions could be conducted with the managers of some of these functional activities to compare the mapped FYDP resource estimates with other resource information the managers are currently using. In addition to providing a means of validating the resource mapping, such discussions may also identify activities where the FYDP mapping provides useful management information that can be used to supplement or replace other information sources.
- ◆ Comparison to FYDP trends. The rate of resource growth (or decline) for various functional activities could be compared to the growth rate in the FYDP as a whole. By analyzing the reasons for the differences in relative growth rates, managers could gain insights into innovative ideas used in one functional activity that might be used to reduce costs elsewhere, or they could identify situations where resource investments had not achieved the intended results.

Enhance and Integrate Tools for Managers

Managers should have tools that enable them to obtain validatable resource information from the FYDP on a recurring basis. The results of this study could be used as the basis for developing new tools and for enhancing existing tools such as TurboBPR, the Defense Integration and Support Tools, and executive information systems. For maximum benefit, efforts to improve resource-related tools should be closely coordinated with an ongoing Performance Analysis and Evaluation project to improve the accessibility and utility of the FYDP.

Report to the Corporate Functional Integration Board

The Corporate Functional Integration Board (CFIB) should be briefed on the results of this study and on the proposed actions for pilot projects and tool enhancement. A presentation to the CFIB would be expected to

- ◆ confirm the value of proceeding with the pilot projects,
- ◆ generate additional user requirements for new or enhanced tools to support strategic planning and reengineering,

- ◆ identify ways that functional resource baselines can be used to simplify and streamline other DoD processes and procedures, and
- ◆ confirm the shortcomings of the FYDP as a source of resource information for functional managers and identify FYDP enhancement opportunities that should be pursued.

CHAPTER 1

Requirements for Functional Resource Information to Aid in Management Decision-Making

When the Corporate Information Management (CIM) initiative was established, it recognized the expanded management role of senior functional managers in ensuring that DoD's functional activities are conducted in an effective, efficient manner. To carry out these responsibilities and make informed decisions, functional managers need access to information on the projected and actual costs of the functional activities they oversee. In addition to the CIM initiative, several other factors have reinforced and strengthened functional managers' need for timely, reliable resource information. These factors include the enactment of the Government Performance and Results Act (GPRA) and the emergence of return on investment and other financial measures as primary criteria for justifying and defending DoD's investments in automated information systems (AIS) and other investments.

Taken collectively, requirements for resource information can be viewed from two perspectives: The first perspective is the need to provide tools and methods to assist functional managers in developing resource baselines to be used within DoD. The second perspective is to help provide a means of demonstrating the benefits of process improvement and the CIM initiative.

RESOURCE BASELINES TO SUPPORT DECISION-MAKING BY DoD FUNCTIONAL MANAGERS

DoD functional managers are responsible for several activities whose execution requires resource information. As part of its effort to define and describe the CIM initiative, particularly the Business Process Reengineering (BPR) component of CIM, DoD has developed a process model that identifies and describes how some of those activities are performed.¹ The model, which is titled, "Optimize DoD Functions," includes the following activities:

- ◆ Perform strategic planning

¹*Business Process Reengineering (BPR) Process Model, Formal Update, Version 3.* Published by the Office of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Information Management), 16 February 1995.

- ◆ Engineer functions
- ◆ Evaluate performance.

Although managers at any organizational level and within any DoD Component can improve or optimize the functions they manage, the model identifies functional managers as having the primary responsibility. Within the context of the model, senior functional managers are the OSD Principal Staff Assistants (PSAs).²

From a resource management perspective, this assignment of responsibilities to PSAs is significant because it expands their responsibilities. In the past, PSAs were responsible for establishing policy guidance for the functional activities under their purview, but their responsibilities have changed (as the “Optimize DoD Functions” model describes).

Perform Strategic Planning

The GPRA was enacted in 1993 to improve the effectiveness and accountability of Federal programs. To achieve this objective, the act requires each Federal agency to develop and submit strategic plans that address program goals and objectives. Strategic planning requires senior managers to develop a vision for their functional areas, to establish goals and measurable performance targets, and to identify high-level strategies that will enable the vision, goals, and performance targets to be realized.

Strategic planning requires resource information for at least three purposes:

- ◆ In developing their vision, goals, and performance targets, managers must be bounded by several constraints, including the constraint of what is realistically affordable.
- ◆ In many instances, performance targets will be keyed to resources. Factors such as total cost and unit cost often constitute an important element of the improved performance that managers are trying to achieve.
- ◆ After goals and performance targets are established, a high-level resource assessment is often required in order to identify potential high-payoff opportunities from among several possible strategies.

²DoD Directive (DODD) 5025.1, DoD Directives System, defines PSAs as the Under Secretaries of Defense, Assistant Secretaries of Defense, DoD General Counsel, DoD Inspector General, Assistants to the Secretary of Defense, and OSD directors who report directly to the Secretary or Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Engineer Functions

This is where the major effort to redesign or reengineer functional activities takes place. To achieve the objective of reengineering activities to make them more effective and more efficient, managers must be able to identify and analyze financial resources within two broad categories: operations costs and initiative costs. Together, operations costs and initiative costs represent the total cost of a functional activity.

Operations costs are the recurring costs of performing a functional activity. In the context of a BPR analysis, operations costs are sometimes referred to as activity-based costs. Initiative costs, which are usually one-time or non-recurring costs, are the investment costs incurred in order to make the reengineered activity a reality. Functional managers use a BPR technique, functional economic analysis (FEA), to analyze both types of costs and to assess whether the initiative costs for a given alternative are justified by the projected decrease in operations costs. (Cost is not the only criteria used in BPR projects; other performance measures are also used.)

The ability to analyze and project both operations costs and initiative costs, besides being an essential element of BPR efforts, will also enable managers to comply with provisions of the GPRA. As noted above, the GPRA requires managers to develop long-range strategic plans that establish goals and performance targets. The act also directs that agencies prepare annual performance plans that establish the linkage between annual budget requests — for both operations costs and initiatives costs — and the improved performance that the requested resources will produce.

Evaluate Performance

The central focus of the GPRA is performance — planning and measuring functional activities by their outputs or outcomes, rather than by the consumption of inputs. The concept of performance is embedded at the front end of the management process in a strategic plan, where the manager's desired objectives are defined in terms of specific performance targets. The emphasis on performance carries through to reengineering, where functional activities are redesigned with the sole objective of meeting the specified performance targets.

Once an alternative for achieving the established performance target has been approved, managers and operators at all levels proceed with implementation. To ensure that the approved alternative performs as projected, and to generate appropriate corrective actions when results go off course, the senior managers who approved the alternative must monitor and evaluate actual performance. As with projected performance, this evaluation has a resource dimension. Initiatives must be evaluated to determine if they are being implemented for the projected cost; operations costs must be evaluated to determine if the projected cost levels are being realized.

DEMONSTRATING BENEFITS TO OVERSIGHT ORGANIZATIONS

Major DoD initiatives are frequently the focus of review and analysis by Congress and other agencies that are responsible for oversight or approval of DoD's programs. This focus often takes the form of inquiries and investigation into financial benefits of the initiatives. As one of the more prominent DoD initiatives of recent years, the CIM initiative is no exception. Numerous studies by the General Accounting Office have addressed the cost and benefits of the CIM initiative, including its BPR component. In addition, Section 381 of the National Defense Authorization Act for FY95 requires DoD to submit annual reports on the progress being made in key elements of the CIM initiative.

Furthermore, there is an increasing interest on the part of external agencies to ensure that the Department is getting value not only from CIM but from all of its investments. As mentioned earlier, the GPRA requires Federal agencies to establish output and outcome performance measures for their programs and to link their annual budgets to the achievement of objective performance targets. Pending legislation, such as the Information Technology Management Reform Act of 1995, continues and reinforces the emphasis on performance and cost.

To answer the questions and concerns of outside agencies, DoD must be able to identify, among other things, the financial benefits generated by its various initiatives. Thus, in addition to helping to support DoD's internal management requirements, the availability of resource information for its functional activities would enable DoD to deal with most of the cost-benefit questions posed by oversight organizations.

DESIRED ATTRIBUTES FOR FINANCIAL RESOURCE INFORMATION FOR FUNCTIONAL MANAGERS

To meet the requirements for internal management and external reporting, functional managers should be provided with financial resource information that has the following attributes:

- ◆ Resources should be identified for the areas and activities that managers have identified as the focus of their CIM and BPR efforts. DoD's list of functional areas and activities identified by PSAs is published annually in Tab G (Information Management) of the program objective memorandum (POM) Preparation Instructions (PPI).
- ◆ To facilitate its validation, resource information should be extracted from an official DoD resource data base.

- ◆ Resource information should be available on a recurring basis and be based on a set of standard definitions that are consistent from report to report. This will enable functional managers to use consistent resource information to support strategic planning, functional economic analysis, performance evaluation, and accountability.

OBJECTIVES

The objective of this analysis is to determine if the Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) can be used to support functional managers by serving as a vehicle for determining resource baselines for the functional activities identified in the PPI. The FYDP was chosen for the following reasons:

- ◆ The FYDP contains resource data for all of the Department's functional activities. It provides a single source of financial resource information for everything DoD does.
- ◆ The FYDP is DoD's official financial resource data base, thus satisfying the requirement that resource information be derived from a source that can be validated.
- ◆ Because the FYDP is based on a standard set of data elements and is updated on a recurring basis, it satisfies the requirement that functional resource information be available on a recurring basis without recourse to ad hoc data calls and that it be consistently defined from one update to the next.

A related study objective is to identify issues or shortcomings that limit the utility of the FYDP for these purposes. This will lay the groundwork for determining the actions that could be taken to address these issues or shortcomings.

CHAPTER 2

Source of Resource Data and Analytic Approach

The FYDP provides the following data elements for each of the records it contains. (See Appendix A for a more detailed description of the FYDP data elements.)

- ◆ Fiscal year.
- ◆ Resource identification code (RIC). The RIC identifies each record as either an appropriation record, a manpower record, or a force record, and it provides more detailed information within each of these categories.
- ◆ Program element (PE). PEs, which are essentially the building blocks of the DoD programming and budgeting system, represent aggregations of organizational entities and the related resources. Since DoD is generally organized around missions, PEs also represent descriptions of DoD's various missions. The first two characters of the PE identify the major defense program. There are 11 major defense programs — 6 combat force-oriented programs and 5 support programs.
- ◆ Value. This is the "quantity" for each record. The unit of measure is unique to each type of RIC. Appropriation records are shown in dollars, manpower records in personnel end strengths, and force records in a number of different units of measure such as Army divisions, Navy battleships, and Air Force aircraft.

The source data for the analysis was the FYDP appropriation records at PE-RIC level of detail. The analysis was limited to appropriation records because the objective is to identify financial resources. PE-RIC, rather than PE alone, was chosen as the level of detail because it was determined that the RIC (i.e., the appropriation), in many cases, provides information that would be useful in identifying the type of activity associated with the resources. At this level of detail, the FYDP comprises approximately 5,200 individual records. Our basic approach was to map each of these records to the functional activities in the PPI. Appendix B lists DoD functional areas, functional activities, and responsible managers.

To achieve the objectives of this analysis, the specific dollar values for each record were not required. Once the records are mapped, it is a simple matter to identify the dollar values.

CHAPTER 3

Mapping Rules

PRIMARY MAPPING CRITERIA

Because OSD PSAs have primary responsibility for performing Business Process Reengineering (BPR), a focus in this analysis is on tracking resources to the PSA responsible for reengineering the functional activity associated with the resources. This is significantly different from most resource analyses, where the focus is on identifying the DoD Component (generally a Military Department or Defense agency) that receives or spends the financial resources in the FYDP. For example, in this analysis, records containing depot maintenance resources would be mapped to Depot Maintenance¹ and, thus, to the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense (Logistics) — without regard to the Military Department receiving the appropriated funds or to the agency doing the work.

With this focus in mind, we developed the following high-level mapping criteria:

1. Map each record to the PSA responsible for conducting BPR efforts associated with the resources.
2. Where the responsible PSA can be identified, but the functional activity either cannot be identified or is not listed in the PPI, map the record to “PSA xxx Other,” for example, ASD(C3I) Other.
3. Where the resources are associated with an activity that is performed outside DoD and not within DoD's control, map to “Not Applicable.” An example would be the funding for DoD personnel on full-time assignment to an external agency.
4. When the resources represent an aggregation of activities that are the responsibility of multiple PSAs, map to a new, appropriately named aggregation category. (See Chapter 5 for a discussion of aggregated records.)
5. When one of the following situations applies, map to “Unknown”:
 - ◆ The resources are associated with an activity that is within DoD, but the PSA cannot be identified.

¹In this report, functional areas and functional activities are shown in initial uppercase letters for ease of identification.

- ◆ The record represents an aggregation of activities that did not justify creation of an aggregated category.

MAPPING RULES

On the basis of a preliminary analysis of the FYDP records, we determined that several rules could be developed that would enable the mapping of many records to the appropriate functional activity. These rules were based on factors such as DoD Component codes, resource identification codes, major defense programs, portions of PE codes, and key words contained in PE titles. The objective in developing the rules was to make it easier to map subsequent FYDP updates to functional activities. Ideally, rules will enable the “automatic” mapping of new or revised records without requiring examination of each individual record.

The rules are constructed so that they must be applied in sequential order. In effect, the rules are applied to the FYDP data base one at a time, with several records being mapped to functional activities on each pass through the data base. Once a record is mapped, it is excluded from subsequent passes, so that no subsequent rule is allowed to override an established mapping.

Fourteen rules, many containing several sub rules, were developed. The application of these rules mapped approximately 2,500 of the 5,200 records in the FYDP; the remaining 2,700 records were mapped on an individual basis. Appendix C contains a complete list of the mapping rules.

DUAL-MANAGED ACTIVITIES

Many FYDP records are associated with dual-managed activities. Dual-managed activities represent situations where separate reengineering efforts by different functional managers are likely to affect the resources associated with the activities. This reflects the nature of the activities; it is not a shortcoming or problem associated with the FYDP data base. Dual management, which was found to apply to approximately 1,500 records, includes situations such as the following:

- ◆ Research, development, test, and evaluation (RDT&E) advanced development: Engineered by managers responsible for Systems Acquisition Management and by functional users. Managers responsible for Systems Acquisition Management affect advanced development to the extent that they engineer or design how the process of advanced development is performed. Functional users impact advanced development to the extent that they create the requirements that advanced development must meet. Reengineering in either of these activities can have a significant impact on the resources associated with these records.

- ◆ Construction: Engineered by managers responsible for Economic Security and by functional users. This is similar to the example above. Managers of the construction process are responsible for determining how that process is performed, while users can have just as significant an impact by virtue of determining the facilities requirements that the construction process must satisfy.
- ◆ Major defense program 5: Engineered by Reserve Affairs managers and by functional managers. The Reserve Components participate in most DoD activities. Some aspects of this participation are managed by Reserve Affairs, while some aspects are driven by the managers in the functional communities.

We mapped dual-managed records to both a primary and secondary functional activity. After first establishing the primary functional activity for each record in the data base, we determined the secondary activity through a combination of rules and a record-by-record examination. In the case of secondary activity, the mapping rules were based on a combination of the primary activity, major defense program, and RIC. The secondary mapping rules are listed in Appendix C.

CHAPTER 4

Results and Issues

RESULTS

Appendix D contains the results of the mapping. For each of the 5,200 FYDP records (as defined by combination of PE and RIC), Appendix D identifies the Defense Mission Category (DMC), PE code and title, functional area, primary functional activity, secondary functional activity, and the mapping rule that was used to determine the primary functional activity. Appendix D also reflects the PSA or other manager responsible for the functional activity associated with the mapped record.

ISSUES

Several factors limit the utility of the FYDP as a source of financial resource information for DoD's functional managers. These factors derive from the fact that the FYDP structure and the list of functional activities were established by different managers at different times to accomplish different purposes. The mapping identified three specific factors that make it difficult to identify resources for all functional activities.

The impact of these issues is that the FYDP provides, at best, only a partial identification of financial resources for the affected activities and managers.

Aggregated Records

More than 500 FYDP records can be identified as containing resources for more than one functional activity, with no ability to decompose these records into their components. The three major areas of aggregation are as follows:

- ◆ Base operations. Just under 200 records, for the most part identifiable by the characters "96" in PE positions 6 and 7, were found that represent aggregations of the multiple functional activities that are inherent in the operation of DoD's bases and installations. These aggregated activities include the following:
 - Programming
 - Budgeting

- Other Human Resources
 - Publications
 - Records Management
 - Other Information Management
 - Reserve Affairs
 - Transportation
 - Procurement and Contract Administration
 - Operations.
- ◆ Management headquarters. More than 250 records, for the most part identifiable by the characters "98" in PE positions 6 and 7, were found that represent aggregations of the many functional activities that are performed by the OSD staff, by Military Department headquarters, and by major commands within the Services. These aggregated activities include the following:
- All Military Personnel activities
 - Civilian Personnel
 - Programming
 - Budgeting
 - Financial Operations
 - Records Management
 - Other Information Management
 - Communications
 - ASD(C3I) Other
 - Economic Security
 - Legal Management
 - Inspector General (IG) Activities
 - Occupational Health and Safety

- Reserve Affairs
- Procurement and Contract Administration.
- ◆ Space. More than 50 records, identifiable through a record-by-record analysis, were found that represent aggregations of several activities associated with space. These aggregated activities include the following:
 - Operations
 - Intelligence
 - Command and Control
 - ASD(C3I) Other.

We handled these aggregations by creating a new functional activity for each of them; then we mapped the aggregated records to these new functional activities.

Component Inconsistencies

From time to time, the Defense Components (the Military Departments and Defense agencies) request, and are granted, permission to create DoD Component-unique PEs to satisfy their internal requirements for resource information. Nothing is inherently wrong with the existence of DoD Component-unique PE structures, but these unique PEs do add to the difficulty of mapping FYDP records to a consistent set of functional activities. The following are a few examples of inconsistencies among the Military Departments:

- ◆ The Army has unique sets of PEs within most major defense programs to define various elements of AIS support, while the other Services do not.
- ◆ The Services maintain different degrees of visibility of program executive offices and program management offices.
- ◆ The Services define and account for various information management activities differently.

Functional Activities Not Visible in the FYDP

No FYDP records, and thus no financial resources, can be identified for the following functional activities listed in the PPI:

- ◆ Records Management

- ◆ Environmental Technology
- ◆ Combatant Logistics
- ◆ Budgeting
- ◆ Programming
- ◆ Medical Logistics
- ◆ Other Policy
- ◆ Military Personnel: Allocation
- ◆ Military Personnel: Retirement and Separation
- ◆ Military Personnel: Core Activities – Masterfile
- ◆ Military Personnel: Sustainment.

In addition, for several activities the small number of records identified strongly suggests that the FYDP mapping provides what is at best an incomplete resource profile.

FYDP ENHANCEMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The issues described earlier represent shortcomings of the FYDP as an ideal source of resource information for DoD's functional managers. Consideration should be given, in consultation with appropriate functional managers and the OSD Comptroller's Office (to include Performance Analysis and Evaluation [PA&E]), to addressing these shortcomings. Several actions could be taken to make the FYDP data base a more useful tool for functional managers. Each of these actions could be implemented on a blanket basis or for selected functional activities:

- ◆ With no change to the structure of the data base, use the sixth and seventh characters of the PE to identify selected functional activities. This approach is consistent with established practice in that these PE characters are already used to identify selected activities within the PE structure.
- ◆ With no change to the structure of the data base, create new program elements to identify functional activities that are not properly identified in the FYDP. For example, multiple PEs could be created to allow aggregated records to be decomposed into distinct functional activities.
- ◆ Create a new FYDP data element to identify functional activity. This would provide the greatest increase in FYDP utility and would not result in the loss of any information that is currently available. However, this approach is also the most extreme of the possible enhancements.

It should be noted that each of these actions would require significant analytical effort to allocate resources to functional activities from the aggregated records, to resolve DoD Component inconsistencies, and to identify FYDP records for activities that are not presently visible in the FYDP. But this latter effort — namely, additional analysis to identify the financial resources for DoD's functional activities — is an effort that must be undertaken in any event to support strategic planning, process reengineering, and compliance with the GPRA. By incorporating the analytical results into the FYDP, managers will be provided with a reliable source of validatable resource information on a recurring basis.

CHAPTER 5

Next Steps

With the initial mapping completed, three actions can be undertaken:

- ◆ Conduct pilot projects to support functional managers with resource information.
- ◆ Provide enhanced and integrated tools.
- ◆ Report to the Corporate Functional Integration Board (CFIB).

The outcomes that would be anticipated from these actions are as follows:

- ◆ Functional managers will be able to use the FYDP to support their strategic planning and reengineering efforts.
- ◆ Managers will have enhanced tools or new resource linkages within existing tools.
- ◆ Enhancements will be identified that will improve the usefulness of the FYDP to functional managers.

CONDUCT PILOT PROJECTS

The most immediate benefit to be derived from the identification of resource baselines for functional activities is the opportunity to provide near-term support to functional managers. This can best be accomplished by conducting resource baseline pilot projects with selected managers. The following steps will be required for pilot projects:

- ◆ Identify participants.
- ◆ Establish managers' requirements for resource information.
- ◆ Determine how to meet those requirements.
- ◆ Work closely with one organization at a time to develop the required resource information.

While additional applications will be identified during requirements determination, there are two applications of resource information that functional managers are expected to find useful and that should be explored in the pilot projects. The first is establishing or validating the resource baseline for a given functional area or activity; the second is giving managers the ability to compare resource trends for a functional area or activity over time with the overall trends in the FYDP.

Resource Baseline

In spite of the shortcomings described in the previous chapter, the FYDP appears to provide a fairly clean and complete mapping of resources for some functional activities. These activities include

- ◆ Command and Control,
- ◆ Communications,
- ◆ Depot Maintenance,
- ◆ Military Personnel: Recruiting and Accessioning, and
- ◆ Military Personnel: Training and Education.

As a means of checking and validating these resource baselines against other estimates used by managers, working sessions could be conducted with the managers of selected functional activities to compare the mapped FYDP resource baselines with other resource information the managers are using. In addition to providing a means of validating these results, such discussions may also identify activities where the FYDP mapping provides information that can be used to supplement or replace existing information sources.

Comparison to FYDP Trends

One approach that senior managers can use to assess their resources is to compare growth patterns over time against a standard or benchmark. With the resource baselines now established for many functional activities, the rate of resource growth (or decline) for a given activity over a period of time could be compared to the growth rate in the FYDP as a whole.

The analysis would entail the following steps:

1. Identify the appropriate time span for the analysis. It would probably be appropriate to start with a year that represents a relatively "steady state" condition prior to the onset of DoD's post-Cold War downsizing. The ending year for the analysis should be the final year of the POM.

2. Identify functional activities that should be excluded from such an analysis. For example, if a major policy decision outside DoD's control had significantly increased the cost of contract administration, then it might be inappropriate to compare the growth rate for Procurement and Contract Administration to the FYDP growth rate. Appropriate activities would be excluded from the analysis; their resources would also be excluded from the FYDP baseline to avoid allowing the benchmark to be skewed by the excluded activities.
3. Determine the benchmark FYDP growth rate for the selected time period. To be most meaningful to managers, resource data for this analysis should be shown in current rather than constant dollars.
4. Determine the growth rate for functional activities.
5. Identify the investments that have been made over time to improve functional activity cost and performance. These might include AISs, non-AIS process improvements, or other initiatives.

With this information, the following types of questions could be posed:

- ◆ For activities whose growth rate is more than 5 percent below the FYDP rate, what actions have managers taken to meet requirements in the face of decreasing resources? Can these approaches and techniques be applied to other functional activities?
- ◆ For activities whose growth rate is more than 5 percent above the FYDP rate, have performance measures increased proportionately? Are there actions that can be taken to make the activities more efficient? Have investments been made that did not pay off (and if so, why not), or has DoD failed to make investments geared at improving efficiency for these activities?

This analysis could be refined by applying sensitivity analysis to the FYDP. For example, an ongoing PA&E analysis suggests that costs in the nonoperations or business elements of DoD fall into three categories, based on the factors that drive or cause the costs:

- ◆ Costs driven by military force structure. These costs are least likely to feel the impact of near-term investments.
- ◆ Costs driven by the size of the civilian and military work force.
- ◆ Costs driven by workload factors or by changes in business processes. This is the area where investments in BPR are most likely to have a meaningful near-term impact.

If costs for each functional activity can be decomposed into these three categories, the earlier questions comparing functional activity growth to FYDP growth can take on a greater degree of refinement. For example, a functional activity that has a growth rate significantly higher than the FYDP rate might have costs that are driven primarily by the military force structure, and it might be the case that cost reductions for the functional activity have not yet “caught up with” the reductions in end strength.

ENHANCE AND INTEGRATE TOOLS FOR MANAGERS

As noted earlier, resource information for functional managers should be available on a recurring basis. This requirement can be best supported by giving functional managers tools and procedures for accessing the FYDP data that pertains to their functional activities and by enhancing the resource linkages within existing tools.

This effort to enhance the usefulness of the FYDP as a tool to support managers is consistent with an ongoing PA&E project to improve the accessibility and utility of the FYDP. The work suggested here should be closely linked with the PA&E work in order to capitalize on the improved access to the FYDP.

Integration with Existing Tools

Several tools exist to support functional managers in strategic planning, process reengineering, selection of migration systems, and other tasks. Resource information plays an important role in each of these tasks. In order to make the tools more useful, we should improve the existing tools by enabling them to integrate with resource baselines that are being developed as a part of this project. The existing tools that should be considered include the following:

- ◆ TurboBPR. TurboBPR enables managers to identify and gain insights into the linkages among strategic planning, reengineering initiatives, and performance improvements. Planned enhancements include an improved ability to identify elements of the strategic plan and the incorporation of much of the functionality currently provided by another tool, the FEA Model.
- ◆ The Defense Integration Support Tools (DIST). The DIST is a suite of tools that supports managers in selecting migration systems and other aspects of AIS management.
- ◆ Executive information systems (EIS). Building on work done earlier, the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology is developing an enhanced EIS to give its managers the ability to view and analyze a wide range of information and data associated with their functional activities. The inherent capability of an EIS to provide exception reporting and to allow managers to “drill down” should be capitalized on by including functional resource baselines in the data bases available to the EIS.

New Tools

Functional managers should be provided a software tool that would enable them to access the FYDP data base in order to obtain required resource profiles on a routine basis. This tool would allow a user to obtain resource information by identifying a functional activity from a "pick list" or by manually entering selected program elements.

The outputs from this tool could be used in a variety of ways to enable functional managers to address several types of issues including

- ◆ identification of the PEs that constitute the major portion of a functional activity in order to focus reengineering efforts on areas of highest possible return, and
- ◆ identification of PEs whose growth rates are significantly above or below the overall FYDP growth rate (growth rates significantly above or below the overall rate could be analyzed as described above).

Given the complexities associated with managing and manipulating the FYDP data base, the most useful near-term approach for developing this tool might be to maintain and apply the tool on a centralized basis in response to managers' information requests, with the tool transitioning to managers over time.

REPORT TO CORPORATE FUNCTIONAL INTEGRATION BOARD

The Corporate Functional Integration Board (CFIB) should be briefed on the results of this study and on the proposed actions for pilot projects and tool enhancement. A presentation to the CFIB would be expected to accomplish the following:

- ◆ Confirm the value of proceeding with the pilot projects.
- ◆ Generate additional user requirements for new or enhanced tools to support strategic planning and reengineering.
- ◆ Identify ways that the availability of resource information for functional activities might contribute to other processes and procedures. For example, improved resource information available on a regular basis from the FYDP might eliminate or reduce the need for some of the special displays routinely called for in OSD's POM Preparation Instructions.

- ◆ Confirm that the issues identified in Chapter 4 represent shortcomings of the FYDP as a source of resource information for functional managers and identify the enhancement opportunities that should be pursued.

APPENDIX A

Future Years Defense Program Data Elements

Future Years Defense Program Data Elements

Complete details on the structure and content of the Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) can be found in DoD Handbook 7045.7-H, the DoD Program Structure Handbook. This appendix summarizes the information contained in that handbook.

The FYDP contains information on DoD's resources from FY62 through the end of the program objective memorandum (POM) period. These resources include dollars, manpower, and forces. For each record, the FYDP contains the following data elements:

- ◆ Fiscal year
- ◆ Resource identification code (RIC)
- ◆ Program element (PE)
- ◆ Value.

In addition, FYDP data displays frequently include the Defense Mission Category (DMC).

RESOURCE IDENTIFICATION CODE

The RIC identifies each record as either an appropriation (i.e., dollar) record, a manpower record, or a force record. This analysis addresses only appropriation records. Table A-1 is a summary of the appropriation RICs.

FYDP Appropriation RICs

Type of appropriation	RIC numbers
Development (primarily RDT&E)	0300 – 0323
Investment (includes procurement construction)	0401 – 0483
Operations (includes operations and maintenance, military personnel, and Defense Business Operations Fund)	0501 – 0598

Note: RDT&E = research, development, test, and evaluation.

PROGRAM ELEMENT

The PE includes a PE code, a title, and a definition.

The PE code is a 10-character code. Some of the characters provide specific information, as shown in Table A-2.

Program Element Code Structure

Character positions	Content
1 – 2	Major defense program. The 11 major defense programs are the following: 01: Strategic Forces 02: General Purpose Forces 03: Command, Control, Communications, Intelligence, and Space 04: Airlift and Sealift Forces 05: Guard and Reserve Forces 06: Research and Development 07: Central Supply and Maintenance 08: Training, Medical, and Other General Personnel Activities 09: Administration and Associated Activities 10: Support of Other Nations 11: Special Operations Forces
6 – 7	Selected special interest areas. Codes currently in use are the following: 90: Visual Information Activities 96: Base Operations 98: Management Headquarters Some codes that were used in the past to identify special interest areas are still maintained in FYDP records. These include the following: 76, 78, 94: Real Property Maintenance 95: Base Communications
8 – 10	Component Identifier Code. This code identifies the Military Department, Defense agency, or other organization that spends the dollars.

VALUE

The value is the quantity for each record. The unit of measure is unique to each type of RIC.

- ◆ Appropriation records are shown in thousands of “then-year” or inflated dollars.
- ◆ Manpower records are shown in personnel end strengths.
- ◆ Force records are shown in several different units of measure, such as Army divisions, Navy battleships, and Air Force aircraft.

DEFENSE MISSION CATEGORY

Although not officially part of the FYDP data base structure, the Defense Mission Category (DMC) for each record is often included in displays of FYDP data. DMCs are used to aggregate resources allocated to U.S. combat forces by mission area¹.

DMCs are developed in a fashion similar to that used to develop the FYDP mapping in this report, in that each PE is mapped to one and only one mission category. The DMC structure uses a six-character code as shown in Table A-3.

Table A-3.
Defense Mission Category Structure

Character positions	Meaning
1	Mission area 1: Major force missions 2: Defense-wide missions 3: Defense-wide support missions
2	1: Major force missions 11: Strategic forces 12: General-purpose forces 2: Defense-wide missions 21: Intelligence and communications 22: General research and development 23: Other 3: Defense-wide support missions 31: Logistics support 32: Personnel support 33: Other centralized support
3 – 5	Additional levels of detail
6	Active/Reserve Component indicator A: Active force G: National Guard forces R: Reserve forces

¹This description of DMCs is based on The Advanced Mission-Oriented Resources Display Model, a report prepared by the Institute for Defense Analyses for OSD Performance Analysis and Evaluation (PA&E) in March 1994.

Functional Areas and Functional Activities

Functional Areas and Functional Activities

INITIAL LIST OF FUNCTIONAL AREAS AND FUNCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

The Office of the Secretary of Defense publishes the list of functional areas and functional activities in the program objective memorandum (POM) Preparation Instructions (PPI). Table B-1 displays the functional areas and activities published in the FY96 PPI, along with the responsible Principal Staff Assistant (PSA). Table B-1 also lists the four-letter code that we used in our analysis to identify each functional activity. The table is sorted by functional area and by functional activity. The four-letter activity codes in this table (and other tables in this appendix) are used extensively in Appendix D.

CREATION OF ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

During the mapping of FYDP records to functional activities, we identified several types of records that could not be discretely assigned to any of the functional activities identified in the PPI. Because our analytical approach required each FYDP record to be mapped to a functional activity, we created new functional activities on the basis of the conditions associated with the nonconforming records. The nonconforming conditions include the following:

- ◆ The list of functional activities in the PPI comprises the “business” side of DoD, but it is not intended to address the activities of deployable military units. We identified records that clearly relate to the operation of such units and mapped these to a new activity, “Operations.” The Reserve Component counterpart to this activity is “Reserve Operations.”
- ◆ The FYDP contains a collection of partially offsetting records for military personnel working outside their parent service, and these records require special treatment in order to avoid double counting or under counting. We mapped the appropriate military personnel dollar records to the functional activity in which they are working, and we mapped the offsetting zero-sum to a new activity, “None.”

- ◆ In cases where the responsible PSA can be identified but the functional activity either cannot be identified or is not on the list of activities in the PPI, the records were mapped to a new activity: "PSA xxx Other" (e.g., ASD [C3I] Other).
- ◆ Records for which neither the responsible PSA nor the functional activity can be identified were mapped to a new activity, "Unknown."
- ◆ Some records represent aggregations of multiple functional activities, and the FYDP provides no ability to further decompose the records into discrete activities. We mapped these records to three new aggregated activities: "Management Headquarters," "Base Operations," and "Space."
- ◆ Several records for Public Affairs Activities were readily identifiable, but the PPI does not include this as a functional activity. We created a new activity, "Public Affairs Activities," with the Office of Public Affairs as the PSA.

Table B-2 lists the additional functional activities developed during the analysis.

REVISED LIST OF FUNCTIONAL AREAS AND FUNCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

As noted earlier, OSD publishes the list of functional activities in the PPI. When this analysis began, the current PPI was the FY96 edition, dated 22 March 1994. The list of functional activities in this edition of the PPI was the basis for most of the analysis and mapping, including the development of the detailed mapping rules and secondary mapping rules.

On 13 February 1995, OSD published the FY97 edition of the PPI, which included a revised list of functional activities. The rules and the mapping were revised to reflect this updated list.

Table B-3 summarizes the changes from the FY96 PPI to the FY97 edition and describes how we accommodated each change in our analysis and mapping.

Table B-3.
Revisions to Functional Activities

Change from FY96 PPI to FY97 PPI	Action taken
Add Communications functional activity.	Review all records mapped to ASD(C3I), Other and to Command and Control. Remap selected records to Communications.
Within the Information Management functional area, delete four functional activities: Information Technology, Information Security, Data Administration/Standardization, and Information Management.	Remap all records from the four deleted activities to the activity Other Information Management.
Collapse functional activities Compliance Auditing and Other Auditing and Management into a new functional activity, Inspector General Activities.	Remap records from the two old activities to the new activity.
Within the Environmental Security functional area, delete the functional activity Installation Management and incorporate it into the Economic Security functional activity.	Remap records from Installation Management to Economic Security.

The FY96 PPI identifies the PSA responsible for each functional area. The FY97 PPI provides the same information and takes this one step further by providing a lower-level identification of the PSA or other manager responsible for many functional activities. Table B-4, which is an update of Table B-1, reflects the complete, revised list of functional areas and functional activities as contained in the FY97 PPI. In this table, the second column lists the PSA responsible for each functional area, and the fourth column lists the PSA or other manager responsible for the functional activity. The table also lists the four-letter code that we used in our analysis to identify each functional activity. The table is sorted by functional area and functional activity.

APPENDIX C

Mapping Criteria and Rules

Mapping Criteria and Rules

PRIMARY MAPPING CRITERIA

As noted in the main body of this report, the focus of the analysis was on mapping each Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) record to the Principal Staff Assistant (PSA) responsible for reengineering the functional activity associated with the resources. With this focus in mind, the following high-level criteria were developed:

1. Map each record to a POM Preparation Instructions PPI-identified functional activity so that the record is linked to the PSA responsible for conducting Business Processing Reengineering (BPR) efforts associated with the resources.
2. Where the responsible PSA can be identified, but the functional activity either cannot be identified or is not listed in the PPI, map the record to "PSA xxx Other," for example, Assistant Secretary of Defense (Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence) (ASD[C3I]) Other.
3. Where the resources are associated with an activity that is performed outside DoD and not within DoD's control, map to "Not Applicable." An example would be the funding for DoD personnel on full-time assignment to an external agency.
4. When the resources represent an aggregation of activities that are the responsibility of multiple PSAs, map to a new, appropriately named aggregation category.
5. When one of the following situations applies, map to "Unknown":
 - ◆ The resources are associated with an activity that is within DoD, but the PSA cannot be identified.
 - ◆ The resource record represents an aggregation of activities that did not justify creation of an aggregated category.

MAPPING RULES

By applying the primary mapping criteria, we developed 14 detailed mapping rules that enabled us to map many records to the appropriate functional activity. These rules were based on factors such as DoD Component codes, resource identification codes, major defense programs, portions of program element (PE) codes, and key words contained in PE titles.

The rules are constructed so that they can be applied in sequential order. In effect, the rules are passed through the entire FYDP data base one at a time, with several records being mapped to functional activities on each pass. Once a record is mapped, it is excluded from subsequent passes, so that no subsequent rule is allowed to override an established mapping.

The detailed mapping rules are listed below. The condition or criterion is shown first. The functional activity to which records meeting the condition are mapped is shown following the colon. Rules that contain words in quotation marks indicate rules based on key word searches. A partial PE or RIC number that includes several Xs (for example 0601xxxx) indicates that any numeric value could appear where the Xs appear.

Rule 1: "Service Support" offsetting records: None

Rule 2: Unique records mapped as exceptions to rules:

- ◆ Recruiting leases: Recruiting (exception to Rule 5)
- ◆ Space activities: Space (a newly created, aggregated activity not listed in the PPI)
- ◆ Depot maintenance funded in Program 11: Depot Maintenance (exception to Rule 13)
- ◆ Washington Headquarters Services records mapped to specific functional activities (exception to Rule 12)
- ◆ Air traffic control: Operations
- ◆ Major Defense Program 6, with Component code *HP: Science and Technology (exception to Rule 12)

SECONDARY MAPPING RULES

The main body of this report discusses the issue of dual-managed activities. As noted there, some rules were developed for the mapping of records to secondary activities; these rules are in Table C-1.

Just as with the primary mapping rules, the secondary rules are applied in sequential order. After all primary mapping rules are applied to the FYDP data base, the secondary mapping rules are passed through the data base one at a time, with several records being mapped to a secondary functional activity on each pass. Once a record is mapped to a secondary activity it is excluded from subsequent passes, so that no subsequent rule is allowed to override an established mapping.

REVISED RULES TO ACCOMMODATE THE REVISED LIST OF FUNCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

As noted in Appendix B, the list of functional activities published in the FY97 PPI reflected several changes from the list in the FY96 PPI. To accommodate the revised list of functional activities, several primary mapping rules were revised. The revised rules are shown here in their complete form; specific changes to accommodate the revised list of functional activities are noted in italics.

Rule 5: PE characters 6 and 7:

- ◆ 76 (Real Property Maintenance [RPM]) and PE title beginning with “minor construction”: Economic Security
- ◆ 78 (RPM) and PE title beginning with “maintenance”: Economic Security
- ◆ 79 (Real Property Services) and PE title containing “RPS”: Economic Security
- ◆ 90 (Audio Visual) and PE title beginning with “visual”: Other Information Management
- ◆ 94 (RPM) and PE title beginning with “RPMA”: Economic Security
- ◆ 95 (Base Communications) and PE title containing “base”: Communications
- ◆ 96 (Base Operations) and PE title containing “base”: Base Operations (a newly created, aggregated activity not listed in the PPI)
- ◆ 98 (Management Headquarters): Management Headquarters (a newly created, aggregated activity not listed in the PPI)

Rule 9: Resource Identification Code (RIC)

- ◆ 0402, 0404 (Base Realignment and Closure): Economic Security
- ◆ 0449 (NATO Infrastructure): Economic Security
- ◆ 0476 (NATO Co-Op Procurement): Economic Security
- ◆ 0509 (Sealift Fund): Transportation

- ◆ 0536 (Environmental Restoration Fund): Clean-Up/Restoration
- ◆ 0543 (RPM — Defense): Economic Security
- ◆ 045x, 055x (Family Housing): Economic Security

Rule 10: “Crypto,” “COMSEC”: Other Information Management

APPENDIX D

Mapping Results

Mapping Results

Table D-2 on the succeeding pages presents the results of the mapping of Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) records to functional areas and activities. The table lists each of the more than 5,000 appropriation records in the FYDP. For each record, the table displays the data elements described in Table D-1. These data elements are explained in detail in the main body of this report and in preceding appendices.

Data Elements in the FYDP Mapping Listing

Data elements	Explanation
PSA for primary activity Functional area Primary activity	See Appendix B.
Rule	This is the mapping rule used to identify the primary functional activity. For a discussion of the rules, see Chapter 3. For a list of the rules, see Appendix C.
PE code RIC PE title	See Appendix A.
PSA for secondary activity Secondary activity	See Appendix B.
Defense Mission Category (DMC)	See Appendix A.

Note: PSA = Program Staff Assistant; PE = Program Element; RIC = resource identification code.

As noted in Chapter 2, this study did not require the identification of dollar values for individual FYDP records or for any functional areas or functional activities in the aggregate; therefore, Table D-2 does not contain values. In accordance with procedures established by the Department of Defense for access to the FYDP, the identification of dollar values would require specific authorization to use the FYDP for this purpose. In addition, the inclusion of values for all functional areas and activities would result in a classified document, which was considered inappropriate for the purposes of this study.

13. ABSTRACT (Maximum 200 words) To carry out their responsibilities for strategic planning and business process reengineering, the Defense Department's managers need reliable financial resource information that reflects the costs of the functional activities they manage. An analysis has been conducted that uses the DoD Future Years Defense Program (FYDP) to develop financial resource baselines for DoD's functional activities. The FYDP is considered the best single source for resource information because it is DoD's official resource data base, the resources displayed in the FYDP are mutually exclusive and collectively exhaustive, and its standardized structure ensures that resource information can be obtained on a recurring basis with a consistent set of definitions and terms. This report maps the financial resource records in the FYDP data base to the Department's functional activities and associated responsible managers. The report recommends follow-on actions that would enable functional managers to use the FYDP to support their strategic planning and reengineering; provide managers with enhanced tools, or new resource linkages within existing tools; and identify enhancements to the FYDP that would improve its utility to functional managers.
